Empowering young minds with learning that goes beyond classroom

Where education is not confined to classrooms but becomes an experience, GD Goenka Public School, Sector 48, aims to empower every child to think, speak, and shine. The school invites students and parents to enroll for new academic session 2026-27.

“From storytelling sessions and role plays to project showcases and class assemblies in higher grades, students in the foundational years are encouraged to step onto the stage, share their ideas, and learn the art of presentation. These everyday practices build essential life skills – communication, collaboration, and leadership – that extend far beyond academics,” states the school’s management.

“Adding to these enriching experiences are larger platforms such as Melodies and Moments – a celebration that recently brought together students in a showcase of music, rhythm, and creativity. Parents witnessed their children transform from hesitant voices into poised performers, radiating confidence and enthusiasm,” noted the management.

As per the management, “Such experiences reflect the school’s belief that learning must engage both heart and mind. With inquiry-driven lessons, hands-on projects, and events that celebrate talent, the school ensures that every child’s journey is filled with discovery and self-assurance.”

“The school offers the perfect blend of learning and confidence-building opportunities. Because here, every child’s voice matters – and every moment becomes a melody of growth,” concludes the management.

Recently awarded the Trailblazer School Award under the Gayatri Devi Goenka Excellence Awards in School Education, GD Goenka Public School, Sector 48 believes that in a rapidly changing educational landscape, impact defines excellence. Talking about the recognition, the school's management team says, "With over 140 branches of the school across the country, this recognition places the school in a position that has been earned through years of consistent, future-focused work across academics, co-curricular pursuits, sports, value education and social responsibility."

The team notes that the school's journey is based on a belief that education must first honour the child. "Classrooms here are spaces of inquiry, dialogue and reflection, where learners are encouraged to think independently, collaborate meaningfully and engage with the world beyond textbooks. The curriculum is enriched by global perspectives, contemporary pedagogies and a strong ethical framework, enabling students to develop both competence and character," they add.

The school's global outlook aims to prepare students to participate confidently in an interconnected world. "Whether through interdisciplinary learning, cultural exchanges, leadership forums or community engagement, learners are prepared to navigate an interconnected world with responsible confidence, and empathy," as per the team.

Elaborating on their approach, the team adds, "Systems are refined, processes are purposeful and every programme is designed with long-term outcomes in mind. Educators function as mentors and facilitators, constantly evolving their practice to remain relevant in a dynamic global landscape. Success here is not an event, but a continuum. Equally integral to the school's ethos is its commitment to social consciousness. Students are sensitised early to the ideas of sustainability and shared responsibility, nurturing citizens who are not only accomplished but aware and compassionate."

"This recognition is a reflection of collective belief and partnership of educators, engaged parents and learners walking the journey together. It acknowledges a culture where excellence is pursued tirelessly, often quietly, but always with conviction. Here, education is guided by values and vision; it doesn't just prepare students for the future – it helps shape it," concludes the team.

Gurgaon school hosts a conclave on leadership & emotional intelligence

Education shouldn't just get children ready for what comes next. It should help them create the future themselves. With this belief, GD Goenka Public School, Sector 48, Gurgaon, recently conducted Evolvium, an academic conclave designed for a generation destined to inherit volatility. "The school invites application to enroll for new academic session," states the school's management team.

Highlighting more about the conclave, the team says, "The event was not imagined as a competitive fest, but as an intellectual crucible that prompts young minds to question, synthesise, and innovate, the conclave themed 'Navigating volatility - the pulse of the changing world,' anchored in the school's belief that education must evolve with the times. The conclave was an invitation to think across disciplines, beyond borders, and ahead of the present."

The team adds, "SciTech urged students to move beyond the comfort of readymade answers and confront the deeper architecture of contemporary challenges. Whether exploring artificial intelligence, quantum computing, biotechnology, or sustainable design, learners were encouraged to interrogate problems at their roots and craft solutions grounded in insight rather than imitation."

At the same time, the MUN at the school showed students how global politics, humanitarian issues, and international diplomacy all work together. "Here, students debated, negotiated, and built consensus, learning that leadership today requires as much emotional intelligence as analytical prowess," the team adds.

By bringing science and diplomacy into dialogue, the conclave aimed to affirm a powerful truth: a society that aspires to progress cannot afford to privilege one over the other. "The in-the next generation is not merely watching history unfold but is already shaping it," adds the team.

What if someone who had never known colour arrived on Earth for the very first time? What would they see? What would they feel? And what would they learn about us? At GD Goenka Public School, Sector 48, Gurgaon, this imaginative question became the theme of the annual day presentation 'Spectrum: A Cosmic Journey' staged by the youngest learners from Nursery to Grade 2.

"The school auditorium came alive with light and music as a gentle traveller from a black-and-white planet arrived on Earth. Exploring oceans, forests and cultures, the curious alien discovered not just colours, but their deeper meanings – truth, kindness, courage, peace, joy, faith, love and belonging," the school's management team said.

From the ceremonial lighting of the lamp to the grand finale, the event reflected planning and collective effort. The young performers captivated the audience with their ease and enthusiasm.

"What stood out most was the spirit behind the show. Mentors, students and parents worked in seamless collaboration, guided by the steady leadership of Principal Anuradha Handa, whose vision continues to nurture creativity alongside character. The support of the school management ensured that the production retained both scale and substance," added the team.

"By the time the traveller returned home, his once-grey cape shimmered like a rainbow, transformed by human kindness, shared experiences and the magic of connection. It was a metaphor that resonated the belief that education, too, is a journey from monochrome to meaning," the team noted.

School empowers students to be global-minded, future ready

View of the school

In an endeavour to offer students a dynamic education journey that honours the individuality of every learner, GD Goenka Public School, Sector 48, is inviting applications for the new academic session. The school's management says, "Under the insightful leadership of Principal Anuradha Handa, the school blends academic depth with creative exploration, nurturing children who are thoughtful in action, expressive in voice, and rooted in strong human values. Guided by the school's core philosophy - Thrive. For Life - each learning platform becomes an invitation for students to explore who they are and who they can become."

According to the team, this educational vision came alive at Wonderfest 2025 - The Spirit of Japan, an inter-school celebration curated for the foundational years. The team says, "Conceived as an immersive cultural encounter, the event offered young learners an invigorating stage to discover and display their abilities. It was a space where the four Cs—critical thinking, communication, collaboration, and creativity—naturally converged, allowing children to engage with ideas, people, and cultures in meaningful ways."

Thoughtfully designed competitions captured the essence of Japanese values—precision, harmony, and quiet determination, notes the team. They add, "The campus vibrated with colour, movement, and youthful curiosity, reflecting learning that was joyful yet deeply formative. Such initiatives are intentionally crafted to nurture life skills that accompany learners long after events conclude. As children explore new contexts, articulate their perspectives, and work alongside peers, they develop resilience, empathy, adaptability, and an inner assurance that grows from experience."

As per the management, platforms like the fest transcend the boundaries of an event. They say, "They become significant milestones in shaping global-minded, culturally aware, and confident young citizens who view learning as a collaborative endeavour."

Nurturing eco-conscious futures through project-based learning

At GD Goenka Public School, learning is envisioned as a “lived experience that shapes not only the intellect but also the character, conscience, and capabilities of every child.” Guided by the school’s ethos of cultivating gratitude, building empowered personalities, and upholding excellence as a way of life, every initiative becomes an opportunity to nurture young citizens who think and act deeply, responsibly, and meaningfully. “We now invite applications for the new academic session,” says the school’s management team.

Within this philosophy, project-based learning (PBL) plays a pivotal role. Introduced from the foundational years, PBL encourages children to question, explore, and apply their understanding in real-world contexts. The recent theme, Every Drop Counts, offered a meaningful platform for learners to connect environmental awareness with purposeful action.

As part of this learning journey, students visited Gurukul, a community-led initiative advancing water security and ecological restoration in Gurgaon. “It was more than just a trip—it helped the children understand how closely human actions and nature are connected. They also saw how traditional ecological knowledge can work alongside modern tools such as digital monitoring systems, showing them how innovation can support sustainability,” the team says.

The true impact of the experience emerged in the children’s own reflections. “I never knew cleaning a pond can bring back birds and frogs,” shared one student, while another noted, “If we save water, we are helping all living things.” Returning to school with renewed purpose, students pledged to serve as water guardians in their homes and classrooms. “Through initiatives such as these, our school affirms its belief that education is not merely about information but about transformation,” the team adds.
